

ABSTRACT

A system for polarizing laser light produces a polarized laser beam with a desired spatial cross-section and minimum divergence. Optical fibers emitting laser light are configured to a chosen spatial cross-section. The emitted laser light is split into two beams that are polarized. The spatial cross-section of one of the beams are combined so that they are aligned and contiguous.